Worker Quality and Labor Market Sorting

Abstract

We test the hypothesis that labor market sorting into outcomes normally associated with wage premia (e.g. incentive pay coverage, urban dwelling, employment in large firms, marriage, and union coverage) is related to a series of non-standard worker “quality” measures.

Author Keywords: quality sorting, wage premia, behavioral traits

JEL classification code: J24